Stay calm, don't panic, take some deep breaths & know that you are right.

Remove yourself from the target. Your weapon is interacting with it, your interacting with your weapon.

Aim for the body, control your breathing, and don't stop moving. Use cover, and you will find a rhythm and a certain... enjoyment of the calm that is chaos.

OP should have asked for Combat Vets and ask for MOS to filter out the LARPs.

Military Occupation Specialty, also knowing that doesnt mean shit. I had a friend who was a cook and saw more combat than most ppl I knw going on supply runs with the truckers because they were understaffed.

Yes. People don't realize the MOS is what you originally trained to for, not what you actually did.

I was a fucking combat photographer and I still saw action, had to document it. Training, celebrations, ceremonies, whatever the fuck command sarg said to point my camera at, I did. So people called me POG but I was still climbing multiple mountains a day with the grunts holding all the same equipment, plus my camera set up, tripod, etc. fuck man. Being called POG is so dumb and insult.

Military Occupation Code

It's asking what your job was in the service. For example 11B is Infantryman.

You probably want a lawyer pedes too, since there's probably going to be some ridiculous legal battle after. Just ask Kyle Rittenhouse. I'd probably tell you the following:

1. go with a group. More friendlies on your side is usually better, armed or not.

2. dont make yourself an individual martyr. This is situational if course, but even if you are wearing plates, you arent invulnerable. Also, you cant help anyone if you're dead.
3. if unarmed, you should flee first. Do everything else like tending to the wounded after the target is suppressed or down and you are reasonably safe. Devote all your limited time and resources to getting away from the gunfire.
4. the hardest part in all this is determining where the gunfire is coming from in the initial moments. Try to keep situational awareness up as you walk along. Actively take note of where exits are located at. Having a plan usually helps assuage some nerves.
5. rehearse any plans in your head and talk through some of them with your group in advance.
6. if you cant flee, hide. If you cant hide, gang up and fight. Usually you will be able to overpower lone gunmen.
7. Pointing a gun at a person is hostile intent. Dont ever do that and dont ever point at anything you dont intend to shoot. Be aware of where your muzzle is, especially if you are holding at the low ready. Also, you might be able to use this to tell whether someone is about to shoot you.
8. gauze, tape, israeli bandages, tourniquets and quickclot cover a lot of potential injuries. If you have those, all the better. Also make sure you know who is carrying them. If you use quickclot, make sure you tell the first responders you used it too.
9. no matter what, you should always maintain the inherent right to self defense. Make sure the actions you take are consistent with self defense.

Its all really generic i know, but the biggest takeaway is being actively situationally aware and having a generalized plan of action that you can then tailor to situations. Also, communicate your plan in advance with anyone you know that can help. Hope it helps.

Doubt I lawyer is going to help much. If the shit hits the fan we are either fucked or we aren't depending on the outcome.

The only reason to talk about lawyers is to figure out what historically has constituted self defense in the state. It can vary from state to state, which is why you always want local help.
